What had begun as a straightforward quest to banish the Shapeshifter Witch and free the good wizard Calypso, has become hideously strange. Only this morning I was eaten by an amphibian whose table manners were quite appalling. As if that wasn't a sufficiently inconvenient start to the day, within minutes I was leered at by a rock which flatly refused to say a word.

At my wits' end I consulted with a wise owl. In place of a clue he fed me a red herring. It was delicious but landed me in a pickle. Rather than completing my noble quest I found myself settling an industrial dispute between a despotic Troll and a herd of militant goats. My intuition began to tell me that there might be more to this magic forest than meets the eye.

Later, I visited the fiery pit of Rôndon (open weekdays and bank holidays 10-6) and considered it truly one of the finest of the thousands of sights man or Swampdunk could ever behold in this queer land. Sightseeing over, I am determined that tomorrow nothing shall distract me from ending my quest and fulfilling my sacred destiny (weather permitting).
